MCGILL GRAD. WRITES HOME FROM RUSSIA

Major W. C. Hyde, D.S.O., on Murman Coast

DEADLY MONOTONOUS LIFE

Member Arch. '13 Tells of Experiences in Russia—Abnormal Weather Conditions

The following letter has been received recently from Major Walter C. Hyde, D.S.O., who was a member of Arch. '13. He is now with the Northern Russia Expeditionary Force now operating on the Murman coast. "Ollie," mentioned in his letter below, is Captain Oliver Mowatt, who was reported killed in action about ten days ago. His many friends will be interested in his account of weather conditions at this time in Russia.

Russia, Dec. 7th, 1918.

Since my last letter, over three weeks ago, I have had some queer moves, and as it seems possible that a mail may be got out to-morrow, I am writing. I am now staying for a while at our Brigade H/Q with the Colonel, waiting for an opportunity to go on still further to join Ollie and the rest of the battery. I came here about two weeks ago, and am still waiting. The trip up from where I wrote from last was quite an experience. We set out at 3 p.m. on a cold bleak day and marched about four miles across an island to where a boat was waiting for us. The boat was a small tug, providing very little accommodation for the nineteen of us who had to board her. The cabin was smelly and dirty and was also the living quarters of the tug's crew, so I had my bed rolled and slept on top of the wheelhouse under the stars. I was quite worn out and had a good sleep. The next a.m., early, we started and fought our way through ice 65 miles further up the river and into the inwards of this country, and slept that night in the little village where Brigade H/Q is situated.

Of course the snow is with us in earnest now, and everything is frozen solid. I have amused myself while here designing sleighs for guns of all sizes which we have in the force. We have made most of them mobile now, so the time has not been badly spent. But it's a deadly monotonous life. Occasionally a traveller drops in on his way up the line, as, for instance, a Yankee war correspondent dropped in this a.m. He only left England on November 12th, so was able to tell us about the armistice and about the rejoicing in England and all the splendid festivity. We only have daylight between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. just now, and you may be sure we get lots of sleep. You should see me out of doors on one of these cold days. A black (Continued on Page 4)

WRESTLERS HOLD GOOD WORKOUT IN THE UNION

Large Attendance Last Night—More Requested to Turn Up on Wednesday

Last night the turnout to the wrestling practice at the Union was quite encouraging. As several of the men had not had any practice since before the exams, a general review was held. The workout began at 7.30 sharp, when the wrestlers paired off.

When the men had taken the wrestling position, they were shown different methods of getting behind their opponents. The follow-up from this position is the drag-hold, in which the one who is working the hold falls forward on one knee, bringing the other over it and down on his shoulders. After this followed a workout on the chancery hold, showing the position in which it can be taken, the hold itself and the counters.

Next followed a workout where all the holds and counters which each man knew were practised. Each of these practices lasted for a period of from two to three minutes at a time. These practices lasted long enough so that each man had three or four practices. After each man had had enough work for the evening he took his shower, so as to cool off before leaving. Students are reminded that these showers are excellent, and provided with both hot and cold water.

There are yet many students about the university who would make good wrestlers if they would only turn out to practice. Not only has the executive secured one of the best wrestling instructors in the city, but also the wrestling quarters in the Union are very well furnished with a two-inch mat, lockers, benches and shower baths. All these conveniences, backed by the fact that wrestling is a first-class exercise both from the point of view of usefulness and of development of the body, ought to bring out a very much larger attendance, and yet many students prefer to attend the gym classes or else have not enough interest in college activities to back them up.

According to a notice in the Daily, gym classes begin to-morrow, and the next B., W. and F. practice is on Wednesday, at 7.30 sharp. Why not come to the wrestling practice?

DON'T FORGET THE BIBLE STUDY CLASSES.

Forty men were present at the Bible Study Classes at the Hall last evening. This attendance was below the average. No doubt the falling off is due to the exams in Medicine. Next week, then, the start for second term must really be begun in earnest. Let there be a record attendance and a successful lesson.

IMPORTANT! SWIMMERS!

All swimmers and divers are requested to turn up at the time trials for the M.A.A.A. Aquatic Meet. The trials will be held from 5 to 6 this afternoon, at the Y.M.C.A. Bath. There will be two teams entered to represent McGill, and every swimmer in the college is urged to be present this evening, so that success will be assured for the college teams.

UNION HOUSE FORMAL DANCE FRIDAY NIGHT

Arrangements Have Been Completed for All Details of the Evening

TICKETS ARE LIMITED

Much Interest Shown and Many Tickets Disposed of

The Union House Committee formal dance, which has been much discussed of late, is to take place Friday night. This is the first formal dance of the season to be held in the Union, and should be well patronized. Apart from the Union dance there will probably be but one other formal dance this year, and hence advantage should be taken of this first function. Formal dances were suspended for the duration of the war, but since the armistice was signed there has been a grand revival in the ranks of the lovers of the "light fantastic." Perceiving this the Union House Committee thought it wise to revive the habit of holding a formal Union dance and after extensive preparations, have everything in readiness for Friday night.

The patronesses for the evening will be Mrs. C. Moyse, Miss Hurlbatt, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. McDonald and Mrs. Robinson.

To date, many tickets have been disposed of, and a lively interest in the affair has been evident. Students who wish to attend and who have not as yet procured their tickets are to be reminded that the number will be limited, and the demand probably greatly in excess of the number of tickets sold. The list has been opened to graduates and already many have taken advantage of this. It has been mentioned that many more will apply, and it is expected that the allotted number will be disposed of shortly. This means that few, if any, will be left for the last day and hence "now" is the pass-word.

The tickets are on sale at the Union and can also be obtained from members of the House Committee. These members are as follows:—

Med.—M. McCrimmon, J. Gilhooly, W. M. Bourke, C. C. Stewart and J. Beall. Science—G. Cloutier, Macintosh and Moquin. Arts—H. C. Knowlton and J. N. Petersen.

Arrangements have been made with McKenna, the florist, for floral decorations. These, with the other embellishments which are to be made, will add a pleasing appearance to the hall.

The catering has been left in the hands of A. Joyce, the confectioners and well-known caterers, and a tasty menu has been prepared for the buffet supper, which will be served on (Continued on Page 4)

SWIMMING PRACTICE TO-NIGHT IN Y. M. TANK

All Men to Turn Out This Afternoon

All swimmers and divers are requested to turn out this evening between 5 and 6 o'clock at the Y.M.C.A. bath for time trials in preparation for the selection of the McGill teams who will represent the college at the M.A.A.A. Meet on March 5th. At least two McGill teams are to be entered, and as every man must have his time taken and passed by the secretary before entering the races, it is desired to have as many as possible out this evening.

The races are all handicaps, so that every man has a good chance to win one of the prizes, consisting of medals, spoons, etc.

The following are the events: 40 yards, 100 yards, 100 yards (breast), 40 yards (back), Style diving, Long plunge, Relay.

For the last three years McGill has been defeated in swimming circles, not through lack of material but through lack of support. As this is the first aquatic meet since the close of the war it is to be hoped that there will be a large turnout of McGill men at the "Y" this evening, and so help to ensure that the meet shall be a great success.

THE ENGLISH COURSE AT MCGILL.

It is always a hazardous thing for any individual student or any student organization to enter upon a course of criticism of the quantity or quality of the learning presented to the undergraduates by the faculty, or the manner of its presentation—not that the critic is at all likely to suffer for making the observation in question. We feel that to suggest any likelihood of this would be an injustice to the professoriate; but the chances are that some other student or body of students may view the matter in an entirely different light, and that what may seem to the first man inadequate instruction may thoroughly satisfy the majority. It is hence in no spirit of self-confidence that the "Daily" puts forward the suggestion printed beneath, but merely with a view to the promotion of useful discussion and the ascertaining of the opinions of the students concerned.

Is the English course provided by the university a sufficient training in the subject? That is, does it, if properly pursued, result in the production of men and women who are able to write simple, forceful English, and express their thoughts through this medium without any apparent difficulty or effort? The answer should be a decided affirmative, but under the circumstances we feel that at the best one can only hesitate to give an opinion.

We wish it to be understood that we are laying particular stress on this matter of training in self-expression through the use of English, because it seems in the first place that this is one of the prime requirements in a man who calls himself a "Bachelor of Arts," and in the second place, that the instruction supplied in all other branches of the subject "English" successfully meets all needs. There is, of course, a good deal included in such a subject, and concerning the provision made with regard to all else but the one division of practice in the writing of English we have nothing but praise.

To put it in a concrete form, it is now possible for a student to take an Honours Course in English and another subject, and to graduate as a Bachelor of Arts, with Honours in these subjects without having written a single essay after he leaves the second year. If training in the writing of correct English is an essential in this department, surely some provision should be made whereby those who are taking the course may obtain the necessary practice. In our opinion, at least, the proper employment of the written word comes only after a good deal of careful work on the subject, and constant writing under supervision seems to be the most important factor making towards improvement. Yet, while care is exercised to have the undergraduates obtain a proper idea of what is to be admired in books and what condemned, and they are encouraged to extend their knowledge by reading, the side of self-expression appears to have been overlooked.

Paradoxical as it may seem, the man who takes a course in History or Political Economy, under present conditions, has a better chance of improving his English style than the Honours student in English, unless the latter be enthusiastic enough to do a certain amount of writing "on the side" and obtain the opinion of competent judges as to the language and construction employed. The first student has to hand in a fixed number of essays which involve a considerable amount of hard work and give excellent practice in condensation. It follows that he will acquire, almost without knowing it, some fluency and variety of expression, even although the criticism passed upon his essays deals more with the subject matter than with the method in which this is set forth. The student of English, on the other hand, is in the odd position of one who has had the matter frequently explained to him with well-chosen examples, but has never been given the opportunity to try for himself. When he does attempt to set his thoughts upon paper the lack of practice often brings about lamentable results, of which the "Daily" has had some opportunity of judging in the past. Fortunately the fact that few students go through college without at some time feeling the need for self-expression in writing brings it about that the average man manages to correct the more glaring faults of his style, but this result could be much more quickly and easily achieved by means of the supervision of the staff.

In conclusion, it seems that the adoption of a system whereby English students in the Third and Fourth Years handed in a brief essay every two weeks for examination by their profes-

ALUMNAE SOCIETY HEAR CHARMING LECTURE

Miss Marie Shedlock, on the Fun and Philosophy of Hans Andersen

Last night in the Assembly Hall of the Royal Victoria College a large audience was held spell-bound by the charm of that wizard of the North—Hans Christian Andersen. Under the magic of Miss Shedlock's presentation the scene vanished from the mind and the stage became peopled with the varied and fascinating imagery of fairy lore. The crowded hall presented the most intense silence, broken only by occasional ripples of laughter at Miss Shedlock's mischievous sallies. One and all felt transported back to the days of the nursery and hung enraptured on the words of the stories with the same implicit confidence felt for them in those days. And yet there was something more added to this, for Miss Shedlock did not neglect, as her title promised, that she would not, to show up the kernel of deep philosophy, which underlay each tale.

Dean Moyle, who was in the chair, introduced Miss Shedlock to the audience, paying a tribute to her wonderful charm. He spoke of the libraries, towards the maintenance of which the proceeds of the lecture were directed, and mentioned that Miss Baylis was always glad to receive books intended for the returned soldiers, who were anxious for literature of all kinds.

Miss Shedlock began her lecture by quoting from the words of Charles Lamb, that "Laughter is a sign of highest development," so that she felt sure of awakening sufficient hilarity in the audience. She recalled the story of the merchant's son who went to the palace and was asked by the Sultan's wife to tell a tale "which should be deep and edifying—yes, and a story at which we can laugh." The part of Hans Andersen's work which would live," said Miss Shedlock, "was his fairy stories. His dramas and novels would die, but his fairy tales, which had been quite wrongly relegated to the nursery, would live forever. These fairy tales, she said, were really philosophical allegories. Once she had felt that she knew Andersen. Now she felt like the scientist who after having spent many years in the careful study of the brain of the mosquito said he felt that if he had only taken a more restricted area he felt he would have done better.

In discussing Andersen's fairy tales, Miss Shedlock first considered the negative qualities to be discounted. First among these was placed the modern farcical element, the present day tendency to cheap humour. Andersen himself had described that type of humour very effectively in his tale of the turkey cock, a would-be wag, who tried to tell his jokes to a stork. "There is no greater strain on friendship," said George Eliot, "than a different taste in jokes." Andersen was an artist and a teacher both, but he never sacrificed the artist to the teacher, which was as it should be. The first positive quality which Miss Shedlock described in Hans Andersen was his wonderful power of bestowing life on inanimate objects. There are sors and, possibly, discussion in class, would remedy the present defect. The amount of book-work done might have to be curtailed a bit, but we are convinced that results would justify the change. Surely the acquisition of a good literary style is as important an object as the cultivation of a critical sense in literature?

THE SALVATION ARMY DRIVE.

On Wednesday and Thursday of this week Montreal will be asked to do its bit in the Salvation Army Million Dollar Drive. This fund is being raised for work among the soldiers who are now returning, and no part of it will be used for their ordinary work. The best testimonial as to the worthiness of this object is given by the overseas men, who have been mothered and helped by the Army lasses, who went almost to the firing line. Many of the returned men now at the university are loud in their praises of the good work done by them.

Another thing that should not be forgotten is the fact that the Salvation Army has made no general appeal to the Canadian public for assistance during the war. It has depended upon voluntary offerings and small collections. It has lent its full strength to assist the appeals for other organizations. To-day the need is as great as ever, and the Salvation Army appeals to our generosity to give them sufficient funds to provide for such of the 300,000 returning men and their families as are in need.

The Salvation Army is co-operating with the Government and all existing agencies in its demobilization and reconstruction work. Its ability to deal with the complex problems of the returned soldiers and their families is unquestionable. The secret of its success is its sacrificial service, its officers are trained to help others to help themselves. Like the soldier, they are ready at all hours to answer the call to service.

Many of the war correspondents who have been lecturing in Montreal lately have given us first-hand information of the work they have seen done by the Salvation Army in France.

So every McGill man is urged to do his bit, and thus in some measure show his appreciation of their sacrificial work.

very few instances of this in history. We know that "the pot called the kettle black" but we are not told the rest of the conversation. We also know that "the dish ran away with the spoon," but their speeches are also lost to history. Two examples were given of Andersen's skill in such cases. The first was the conversation between the garter and the shirt collar. Once in America, said Miss Shedlock, a lad had objected to this anecdote on the same basis as May's mother, who wrote to her teacher: "Don't teach May more about the insides. It's rude and it don't do no good." Miss Shedlock then recounted the conversation between these two who met in the wash—"the place of meeting was itself an inspiration"—and concluded with, "This is the story: 'Honi soit qui mal y pense.'"

The second story was that of the two gingerbread cakes, which had for Andersen's sake, "always a tear behind." One gingerbread cake was a man with a bitter almond in his side which was his heart. The other gingerbread cake was a maiden, and she was honey all over. They loved each other but they loved in silence till one day the maiden dried up and broke in two. Then the man said: "She would have held together longer if she had only known that I returned her love."

The second quality that Miss Shedlock noted in Hans Andersen was his power of bestowing speech on animals. This is not so easy a feat as it appears, and Miss Shedlock was reminded of Goldsmith's words to Dr. Johnson, who, he vowed, would make all his fishes talk like big whales. The art of giving speech to animals, Andersen borrowed from the writers of fables, but he gave speech only to the domestic animals, and he easily surpassed his masters in the art. In illustration, Miss Shedlock quoted two of Andersen's animal conversations; the one in which the parlor cat tells the kitchen cat that the two lovers would now drink milk out of one can, and the one in which the dog tells the snowman that these two lovers are now going to gnaw the same bone. But, perhaps, the finest example of this quality is the conversation of the snail to the rosebush. He is going to accomplish something but he isn't going to begin all at once. The rose, he says, did things too soon and lost the pleasures of anticipation. There, said Miss Shedlock, was summarized the attitude of the whole American continent.

There are people who say they prefer the brothers Grimm to Andersen, but it must be remembered that these collected folk lore—they did not write themselves. Andersen created his stories for himself. There is a lady in our own time who has caught much of the spirit of Andersen. Miss Shedlock illustrated this with a charming story about the song of the nightingale from this author.

Andersen, said Miss Shedlock, felt satire and resentment. He remained a child all his life, and was afraid of so polished a weapon. "We do not want," he said, "wet dogs to lie in the best places in the house," and he wanted often to chastise these dogs. So sometimes he took the weapon in hand himself. Consider his scathing criticism of critics. Four brothers are decided to do something. The fifth reasoned over the ridiculousness of everything. He was the last to die, which was quite as it should be—he had the last word. After death he found himself waiting at the gate of Heaven with old Mother Margaret. "Was this for contrast," he wondered, and did not know that Mother Margaret had set fire to her hut that the glacier might not go down to destroy the houses in the valley. The angel opened the door wide and let her in but the critic was told to stand outside until he had done something. Here is Andersen's sarcastic touch: "I believe," thought the critic, "that I could have said that better." He did not say it aloud and that was something.

On the 2nd of April, said Miss Shedlock, we would all celebrate the 114th anniversary of Hans Andersen. Just before Wilson had declared war Miss Shedlock had spoken in New York on Hans Andersen, and had pointed out that he gave a most extraordinary prediction of the Russian revolution, and of another greater revolution, but that was not within the scope of this lecture.

Andersen had a passion for the theatre, and wrote of the "auntie" who spent much of her time at the theatre and left at her death a fund to be spent for tickets to the theatre for lonely spinsters. The seats were to be in the second left-hand tier, and the only condition of the gift was that the recipient was to think of "auntie" in her grave. This Andersen called "Auntie's religious foundation."

The fourth quality to be found in Andersen's tales is his philosophy of life, and in this is included his power to see both sides of a question. Miss Shedlock quoted his "Dame," whose husband thought a woman had no need of a soul, but should be "a plain decent body, and look after her pots and pans." This is not unlike the view of Schopenhauer, "European women ought never to have been created but we have need of them for domestic purposes, and, therefore, they should be trained to obedience and not to insubordination." One thinks of the fat mole who saw outside his home a sparrow apparently dead, and was thankful that none of his children would be birds—or of the fir tree, who told a tale to the mice in attic. The rats thought that his tale, which dealt not with hams and store-rooms, "where you go in thin and come out fat," but with a little tree in the forest, a foolish story, and would not listen to it.

Andersen's child-like nature rejoiced in the kings and queens of his stories; he loved the insignia of office. The most famous of his stories relating to snobs is that of the real, true princess who felt the pea under twenty mattresses and twenty elderdown quilts. A real princess wrote to Andersen a letter which he always treasured. She could not understand his story, she said. She had put twenty peas under one mattress and had not felt them at all.

Once again Miss Shedlock repeated that Hans Andersen loved children, but he did not write for them; and she quoted an appreciation from Hilaire Belloc. The pallor and beauty of his stories, she did not touch on. They belonged to another chapter.

In conclusion, Miss Shedlock told two of Andersen's stories: "The Swineherd," which she considered his masterpiece; and in response to the enthusiastic demands of the audience, "The Nightingale."

Dean Moysie then thanked Miss Shedlock for what he termed "the most charming lecture he had been privileged to hear." Miss Shedlock had carried him back to the days of his childhood in the western part of England. He had been brought up on pixies, and spoke of fairy lore as an example of the power of increase. First were the pixies, then fairies as they existed in the mind of the peasant, and then the whole fairy court as immortalized in Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream."

The meeting closed with the singing of the national anthem.

"SATURDAY AFTERNOON"

Experiences of Some of the Y.W.C.A. Representatives Visiting Around the Main.

Rat-a-tat-tat! Rat-a-tat! The visitors, after a few more futile attempts at knocking, turned the handle, and after trying again at the inner door, were finally admitted. Left to our own devices for a few moments, we took a glance at our surroundings. So this was a Montreal street—a dirty, unpaved, unhealthy alley, with houses positively unvarnished for filth, where the number of children that could be packed into one of these tenements was unbelievable! Moreover, the settlement-visitor, when she re-appeared, hastened to assure us that the snow gave the place quite a decent appearance! (N.B.—The snow was pretty dirty to begin with.)

Further on, we were given the chance to look into some of the courts in the rear of the tenements. Sometimes, really, it did seem as if there could not possibly be anything at the back—much less houses, where people lived and died, and children were born and grew up. . . . and nobody seemed to care. Nobody seemed to realize that within an hour's walk were conditions which of themselves produced the vice in all its various aspects which reigns in Montreal to such an extent.

These courts varied in the types of houses which were found there. Sometimes there was a row of absolutely identical dull-red brick tenements; sometimes a dirty, tumble-down group of hovels of rotten wood, resembling disused stables (dating from about the time of the Flood).

Our brief tour of inspection was ended by a visit to a local moving-picture hall. We left the theatre in the midst of a vaudeville sketch, in which the principal actors were five ballet-girls and one solitary man (in a straw hat!). To be fair, the bill—or, rather, what we saw of it—might have been much worse. Certainly, it was no worse than what is presented at more expensive vaudeville theatres of supposedly good repute.

A word in closing with regard to our relations with the people who live in districts similar to that which we visited on this sunny February afternoon. There are real living beings struggling along somehow in these miserable conditions. It is up to us, when our eyes have once been opened—in this case, thanks to the efforts of the Social Service convener of the Y.W.C.A. committee, and also to the kindly interest of Miss Hall of the University Settlement—to remember that these people are our fellow-creatures—people to be helped and pitied; and to act on our good resolutions just as often and as faithfully as we can.

R.V.C. Undergraduates

There will be a short but important meeting of the R.V.C. Undergraduate Society on Tuesday, February 25th, at one o'clock, in the Common Room. Everyone is asked to be present, especially the students of the three upper years, as important business arising from a letter from Mrs. Vaughn will be discussed.

Delta Sigma Society

As previously stated, the Delta Sigma Society will hold an Impromptu Speaking Contest on Wednesday, February 26. These contests are always interesting, and it is hoped that the contestants will be well supported. There are two prizes offered for the two best speeches, and this fact may help to spur the speakers to yet greater efforts.

The judges will be Mrs. Irwin, Miss Willis and Prof. Slack.

As an added attraction, Miss Marie Shedlock is to tell two of her charming stories at the opening of the meeting, so those who did not have the opportunity of hearing Miss Shedlock last night will be able to do so, and those who have already heard her lecture will be glad to hear some more of her delightful stories, told in that fascinating way which makes Miss Shedlock such an irresistible storyteller. Be sure to be prompt, so as not to miss even one word of Miss Shedlock's stories. The meeting will begin at 3.15, in the Common Room.

CANADIAN AERIAL SERVICE.

An aerial passenger and freight service between Toronto and Hamilton, Ontario, will begin within a few weeks, according to a recent announcement by Roy U. Conger, of the United Air-Craft Company. Four hundred aeroplanes were recently purchased by the Canadian Government.

CORRESPONDENCE

The Daily is not responsible for the sentiments of letters published in the correspondence columns. Signed communications from graduates, undergraduates and members of the faculties will be placed in print if they are not of too great length.

Correspondents are requested to observe the unwritten law of the newspaper office—that they write upon ONE side of the paper ONLY.

No communication will be admitted in this column without the name of the writer being attached, not necessarily for PUBLICATION.

The Editor, McGill Daily:

Dear Sir,—I am taking the liberty of asking you to bring to the notice of the students of McGill University the Salvation Army Campaign, which is to take place on the 26th and 27th inst. in this city.

Any of the boys who have been overseas will know the splendid work the Salvation Army did over there, and the people at home know equally well the wonderful work this organization does throughout the world.

It would, in my estimation, be a most worthy cause for the students of McGill to subscribe to, the best way being through the treasurers of the different undergraduate societies.

Any further information desired I will be only too glad to furnish, or refer to the Salvation Army Million Dollar Fund Committee, Eastern Townships Bank Building, Main 488.

Sincerely yours,

WALTER S. SUTHERLAND,

AT THE SHOW*The Imperial.

The programme presented for the first of this week at the Imperial is a well-balanced one. The feature picture, "Here Comes the Bride," in which John Barrymore is appearing,
 is full of laughs from beginning to end,
 and provides many apparently insolvable complications, which, however,
 all "come out right in the end."
 Houdini appears in the second episode of "The Master Mystery," a part author of which is Arthur Reeve, of Craig Kennedy fame, and manages to wriggle out of a strait jacket after being apparently put out of action by a clique of unscrupulous financiers.
 The automaton part of the film will attract a good deal of interest from students of science, as it is endowed with a human brain.

Other items are photographs of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's funeral, the British Official War News and a Mutt and Jeff Comedy, which, as usual, draws many bursts of amusement from the audience. A delightful musical programme adds to the attraction.

At Loew's.

The programme at Loew's this week presents a variety of attractions. At this time the pictures of the funeral of Sir Wilfrid Laurier are of interest.
 Several views of the ceremony are shown, and in some cases the photographs were taken from good vantage points. The big picture of the evening, "Frank Keenan in 'Told of the Times,'" has a well thought out plot.
 It is a newspaper story in which a news editor with no initiative tries to win promotion to the desk of the managing editor. Several amusing situations occur during the course of the picture.

into the game in quick manner, and his presence will add confidence.
 The Intermediates will play their regular team, including Carl Forbes, also a returned man, and unless the Central "Y" has secured much new and better material, our second team should add another victory to their list and still retain their leading position in the league.

Students are urged to come to the Central "Y" to-night at 8 o'clock and support two winning teams. Toronto Varsity say they have 400 students to an Inter-faculty game. Are we going to take second place in this respect.

BROWN'S BASKETBALL TEAM.

The Brown University basketball team is rapidly rounding into mid-season form. Although handicapped by the lack of a coach, the players are showing much promise. A number of games have already been played this season, and considering that this is the first season of Varsity basketball at Brown since 1912, the record is good.

Considerable difficulty is being experimented in arranging games with other colleges as few of them are being represented on the floor this year.
 Also, due to the fact that it is a new major sport, expensive trips are not being undertaken.

 Wish I had some real deer moccasins, but they cannot be got here. We have snowshoes, skis and a couple of toboggans with dog teams; but the war, as we know it, is over, and why should we be mixed up in this trumpery little show up here? I think I made a poor bite when I jumped at the opportunity of coming here, yet it is all so immensely funny that somehow we don't mind it much. All that worries us, apart from my not being able to get home so soon as my friends in France, is that I am going to miss the triumphal return of all the old crowd to Canada. I don't suppose we shall stay here much longer than they stay, but at the same time our final arrival
 will be lost sight of in the aftermath of the general return. Still, I suppose we must still say "C'est la guerre."
 Word has just come by signals that a mail is going out from Archangel day after to-morrow, so, as there is an officer here now who hopes to get down there in time to catch the boat,
 I will get him to see this on its way,
 and I do hope it gets there in time and that I may get some mail soon.
 Haven't had a letter since the 28th October except one which drifted in from goodness knows where two weeks ago. It was from Louis Biggar, and was dated Marseilles, Sept. 14th. At that rate, you will receive this in time for it to wish you Merry Easter. However, believe outgoing is going to be systematized shortly and kept up all winter, so I hope there will not be such long periods between my letters to you.

ARTS '22 DEBATE ON WEDNESDAY

The first of a series of debates planned by Arts '22 will be held in Room 5 of the Arts Building, on Wednesday the 26th, at 12 o'clock. The title of the debate will be, "Resolved, That Beer and Light Wines be Included Among the Prohibited Alcoholic Beverages."

Mr. James and Mr. Willis will take the affirmative and Mr. Macklaier and Mr. Bullock the negative.
 The plan to be followed in these meetings is as follows: Each debater will have five minutes to speak and the leader of the affirmative three minutes
 to rebut his opponents' arguments.
 Next, a free discussion by those present
 will be allowed.

Mr. Latham has kindly consented to act as judge for this debate on Wednesday.

QUEEN'S AND A WAR MEMORIAL.

At Queen's recently a mass meeting of students was held to discuss the subject of war memorials. Following the lead of McGill, it was unanimously decided that a memorial should be erected and that it should be in form something lasting and substantial, preferably a building. It was pointed out that the new library, a personal gift of the late chancellor, is to be a war memorial.

Among the suggestions made were:
 A chapel, a set of chimneys for Grant
 Hall Tower, a pipe organ, a Students' Union or a monument. Of these, the chapel and monument seemed most favourable to the meeting. The feeling was strongest, however, for the chapel, but doubts were expressed as to the possibility of raising sufficient funds. It was finally decided that the amount attempted should be $200,000,
 and a committee of three was appointed to follow the matter up and to put the scheme before the faculty and alumni.
